

“Project Management as a Determinant Of, and Influence on Organizational Modes of a Developing Country”

(Management by Projects Proceedings, INTERNET '90, Vienna, Austria, 1990).

The paper covers the normative project management systems and specifically discussed the blending or mixing of the Saudi Arabian culture with the business environment. It suggests a better understanding of the Project Manager's authority and responsibility based on a prescribed “environment”, that conflict resolution methods being used among developed countries needs adjustments and culture/business mix if to be applied in developing countries and finally recommend the use of project management as a solution for the problems endemic to the combination of normative project management system and the culture/business mix.
