

Abstract:

This paper presents simulation results for the transient behavior of two induction motors operating on the same drive shaft e.g. both share the torque required by the load. The behavior of the two motors is depicted from their voltage balance equations expressed in a synchronously rotating D-Q frame. The study is mainly associated with investigating the effect of relative differences in motor's parameters on torque sharing oscillations, and input stator current.