SOCIETY'S LIBRARY GOES ONLINE

The Royal Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain has launched the first phase of its online library catalogue, a new service to help meet the information needs of pharmacists.

The catalogue of library holdings is available online through the Society's website (www.rpsqb.org.uk). Simple but powerful search facilities make it easy to track down items of interest. For many items web links offer seamless world wide access to the full text 24 hours a day, direct to your computer screen.

Roddy Morrison, the Society's librarian, said: "The new service allows 24 hour access to the library catalogue, which is the key to making this unique collection of pharmacy related information available to pharmacists. This is the first stage in a programme to deliver more library and information services over the internet. Future developments to the library catalogue will allow users to look up their library account, to reserve and renew loans, and to make requests for stock and non-stock items."
